NWSA and AT&T Sponsor New Initiative to Support Leaders in the Wireless Industry

(Salt Lake City, UT) – The National Wireless Safety Alliance (NWSA) is teaming up with AT&T to support the development and growth of new and emerging leaders in the wireless industry through a new initiative aimed at increasing the number of NWSA-certified Foremen.

AT&T has generously donated $75,000 to cover the one-time cost of the Foreman Certification exam. All TTT-2 certified technicians interested in taking the Foreman Certification Exam are eligible to be sponsored on their first attempt. Foreman exams sponsored by AT&T will be available on a first come, first served basis and limited to a single exam application.

Duane Macentee, Executive Director of NWSA commented that “It is our great pleasure to announce this collaborative effort with AT&T who has been a longtime supporter of NWSA and its mission. We are excited about the impact this initiative will have for our telecommunication workforce and growing leadership in our industry.”

“We believe there’s ample opportunity to drive more adoption of trade credentials across the industry,” said Jim Coleman, principal network process & quality, AT&T. “We’re excited to join the NWSA in supporting such an important program that can help technicians earn more advanced certifications and grow their careers.”

Who’s Eligible?

All TTT-2 certified technicians who are taking the Foreman Certification exam for the first time are eligible to receive one-time sponsorship funding.

How Does One Apply?

Eligible candidates will use a designated coupon code when making payment for the Foreman exam application. All details can be found here at <https://www.nws-a.org/foreman-sponsorship/>.

We encourage industry workers, companies, and all stakeholders to visit www.nws-a.org to learn more about NWSA and the certification process.
